Dear General Leach:

Herewith, I am forwarding for your personal reading the Summer 1982 issue of Studies in Intelligence (Vol. 26, #2).

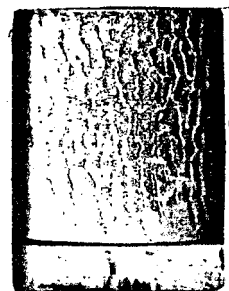

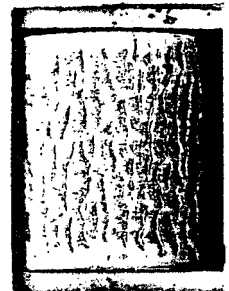

As you know, Studies is a Community issuance, published under the aegis of the Director of Central Intelligence. Founded 26 years ago by Sherman Kent to foster the development of a literature of Intelligence, Studies is governed by an Editorial Board drawn from across the Central Intelligence Agency. A member of the Board for several years, I now serve happily as its Chairman.

The pages of Studies are open to anyone in the Community. We hope that you will encourage your people to join with us in publishing the journal, which enjoys a wide readership throughout the White House, the Department of State, and the Department of Defense.

Of particular interest in this issue are three essays, one by
